From A Village to the WORLD

By Pham Thi Ha-VNU

I grew up in a mountainous tea-growing region in northern of Vietnam where children were supposed to spend more time in field than in classes. I am now going to earn a PhD at a university in America. Do you want to know the journey from my village to the world?

Wanting to have a better life than my parents, I learned very hard to go to university as many of my friends did. At the threshold of my university, I was nothing but a normal student with a medium position in class. I also found everything in the university to be new and 'dangerous'. But I decided to raise my hand for those new things instead of keeping my life in a safe region. I registered for clubs, establishing my own one, joining voluntary group and so on. Gradually, I made a lot of friend who later inspired me in my journey to America. In addition, thanks to those social activities, I became a more active student, which was a positive point for my application later.

Besides, I understood that 'luck favor prepared mind'. Therefore, I always trained myself with English and my major. Thanks to this, whenever foreign professors came to my university, I was able to learn from them, talk to them and express myself. Therefore, they could remember who I was. Then I could ask them for letters of recommendation and an internship in their lab. At first, I thought that I could never have a chance to take an internship overseas since only some top students in the class could do. However, now when I looking back, I realize that it was not that difficult if I always prepare my knowledge and be confident when communicate with professors.

From a normal girl I am now able to touch my dream. I learn that the journey from my village to the world is long, but activeness and hardworking were my only luggage.

Trang An LANDSCAPE Complex

The Trang An Scenic Landscape Complex has been declared a World Culture and Nature Heritage site by the UNESCO. PSA Hanoi would like to introduce this landscape to you through a article posted in UNESCO website.

Trang An Scenic Landscape Complex (Viet Nam) is inscribed as a mixed natural and cultural property. Situated on the southern shore of the Red River delta, Trang An is a spectacular landscape of limestone karst peaks permeated with valleys, some of which are submerged, and surrounded by steep, almost vertical cliffs. Exploration of some of the highest altitude caves that are dotted across the landscape has revealed archaeological traces of human activity dating back almost 30 000 years. They illustrate the occupation of these mountains by hunter-gatherers and how they adapted to climatic and environmental changes. The property also includes Hoa Lu, the old capital of Viet Nam in the 10th and 11th centuries, as well as temples, pagodas, paddy-field landscapes, with villages and sacred sites.
